

The group, the Whitney Ten Dissenters was the idea of artist Ilya Bolotowsky. In a letter written to Lou Schanker, he related his ideas about the museum and suggested that if Lou had similar feelings, he should put together a group of like minded artists, such as Adolph Gottlieb and others. He chose Lou to select the group because of his wide circle of friends and respect in the art community.

At Schanker's memorial in 1981, Bolotowsky spoke of these events and his admiration for Schanker's ability to get the best models in Paris for himself and the other struggling artists without every paying for them.

Groups the Ten

Schanker
Ben Z. 104
Rosenborg
Lou Harris X
Joe Solmon
Balotowsky, Tchakassov
Gottlieb X Rothko ->

DECEMBER 21, 1935.

If the Chavannes show is calm, that of the group which calls itself "The Ten," making its debut at the Montross Gallery, counterbalances it with its violence. Actually, the names are none of them strange to the art world. All have exhibited at the Uptown Gallery and later with Godsoe at his short-lived Gallery Secession.

Their number includes Ben-Zion, Ilya Bolotowsky, Adolph Gottlieb, Louis Harris, Kufeld, Marcus Rothkowitz, Louis Schanker, Joseph Solman and Tschacbasov.

Broad, Free, Unfettered.

Not one among them will be acceptable to that part of the public which still insists that a leg is a leg and should look like it; that juxtaposed colors should be harmonious (according to the traditions of the Academy, that is) rather than jarring; that ugliness should have no place in a picture when there is so much ugliness in the world anyway.

For these are broad, free and unfettered compositions that know no bounds but those of individual temperament. Ben-Zion's four pictures, labelled "Lynching," "Friday Evening," "Fortune Telling" and "Abstract Landscape," look at first glance like so many spatterings of wild color in which only curls of white paint like wriggling snakes may be discerned. Gottlieb's distorted figures are in the Milton Avery vein; Kufeld's morbid compositions, Tschacbasov's unpretty caricatures, Schanker's conglomerations of color-patches, among other things, all are bound to alienate no small part of the gallery-going public.

That, of course, means nothing at all. The important thing is that none of the group have been walking along familiar and sure paths, that each is still experimenting, that all are young and eager and determined, and that some of them—Gottlieb, Harris, Schanker and Bolotowsky especially—are able technicians.

E. G.

By EMILY GENAUER.

FIRST EXHIBITION

THE TEN

AN INDEPENDENT GROUP

DECEMBER 16 — JANUARY 4, 1936

MONTROSS GALLERY
785 FIFTH AVENUE, NEW YORK

THE NEW YORK TIMES, SUNDAY, DECEMBER 15, 1935.

1st EXHIBITION—DEC. 16-JAN. 4

THE TEN

HARRIS / SOLMAN / TSCHACBASOV
SCHANKEE / BOLOTOWSKY / KUFELD
BEN-ZION / GOTTLIEB / ROTHKOWITZ

Montross Gallery, 785 Fifth Ave.

NEW YORK POST, SATURDAY, DECEMBER 21, 1935

THE TEN ARE STAGING THEIR FIRST GROUP SHOW

Expressionism is relaunched by The Ten (who are nine, but looking for the tenth hand) in their first show as a group at the Montross Gallery. Admittedly they have put a lot of raw meat on the table, but the flavor, decidedly gamy, leaves no doubt that it is meat.

A few titles will show why this movement, though centering on fantasy, is not entirely subjective and retrogressive: Lynching, Fortune Telling, Sweatshop, Musician, Abandoned Factory, Mystery of Rebirth, Subway, Head of a Nun, Leap Frog, Junk Shop, Politician, and Handout.

Most of these artists are really not ready to show yet. Louis Schanker and Louis Harris are probably the most developed. Bolotowsky, Tschaibasov and Solman look as though they may soon score some direct hits. Rothkowitz still swings pretty wildly. Adolph Gottlieb, Ben-Zion and Kufeld are less interesting. But this is only round one—too early for a decision.

NEW YORK HERALD TRIBUNE,

SUNDAY, DECEMBER 22, 1935

An Independent Group

A new group of artists, "The Ten," are exhibiting at the Montross Gallery until the end of the month. Adolph Gottlieb, with a sensitive figure study "Conference," and Ben Zion, whose interior "Friday Evening," is strongly patterned, seem best to realize their intended aims in the show. These artists, who are usually very forthright in their expression of liberal principles, include several former affiliates of the late Secession Gallery among their members. Much of the work is erude, showing too little regard for technical considerations. A brightly-painted jig-saw design by Ilya Bolotowsky, and low-keyed fantasies by Joseph Solman, are worked out with better than the average understanding of the oil medium.

- BEN-ZION
BOLOTOWSKY
LEE GATCH GOTTLIEB HARRIS
KUFELD ROTHKOWITZ SCHANKER
SOLMAN

- LOUIS SCHANKER
- 29. GROUP COMPOSITION
  - 30. QUARTET
  - 31. APPLES AND VIOLIN
  - 32. TWO MEN

THE TEN

AMERICAN LEAGUE

against war and fascism

BKLYN HTS BR.

and the "10"

WILL HOLD AN ART AUCTION BENEFIT OF SPANISH CHILDREN

SUNDAY
DEC. 5-2:30PM.
85 CLARK ST. BKLYN.

EXHIBITION

DEC. 3-4-5

PAINTINGS WATER COLORS DRAWINGS PRINTS

DONATED BY RALPH PRESS

A New Group Exhibition of Work by The Ten

A GROUP of nine artists, ingeniously enough called The Ten, has its annual exhibition at the Montross Gallery. Each artist is represented by four canvases which together present varying individualities giving free rein to temperamental and emotional expression with a romantic intensity.

Most commendable are the portraits by Adolph Gottlieb. With telling distortions and suggestive tones he fixes his character; whether with the wistful melancholy of Man with a Hat or with the winning humor of the matriarchal Family. However, there is a lack of substance, of structural form, in the romantic Crucifixion which points out a similar weakness, despite other merits, in the paintings of Rothkowitz, Harris and Solman. Too great a sacrifice of elemental form is made for the sake of establishing a mood that itself is a transient one.

Two abstractionists, Louis Schanker and Ilya Bolotowsky are apart from the group. While Schanker paints cubist complexities in harmonies of color and line, Bolotowsky, in intense, blatant color paints geometric patterns. Lee Gatch, a new member of The Ten shows promising black and orange scenes which unite pattern with reality. So too does Ben-Zion in his firm paintings stamped by the character of the wood-block. While Orchard and Forest have a pleasant decorative starkness, The Buying of Manhattan is unsuccessful in its repleteness. Yankel Kufeld's Night, personified by a hooded figure, is notable for its romantic strength.

M. D.

NEW YORK AMERICAN

SATURDAY, DECEMBER 26, 1936

EXPRESSIONISTS.

The second annual exhibition of paintings by the group of American modernists who call themselves "The Ten" is so much better than their first show that a reviewer leaves the Montross Gallery, where the show is current, with the opinion that their worst fault is only lack of thought and practice. How many years it will take them each to clarify his aims and perfect his craft remains, of course, a question. In any event, their work today is considerably less youthfully impassioned than it was a year ago, less insistently intense and technically less restless.

While most of "The Ten" are expressionists, they do not minimize realistic external appearances in the same degree. They declare among themselves that Adolph Gottlieb, for instance, retains a good bit of realism in order to heighten the force of his satirical treatment, while on the other hand, Ilya Bolotowsky feels that he can best project his "distillations of visual and emotional experiences" by means of geometrical patterns. The new member of the group, Lee Gatch, seeks to reconcile realism with the abstract in such a way as to avoid loss to his painting of either spiritual or sensuous quality.

In addition to the artists already mentioned, "The Ten" include Ben-Zion, Louis Harris, Yankel Kufeld, Marcus Rothkowitz, Louis Schanker and Joseph Solman.

EXPOSITION THE TEN

du 10 au 24 Novembre 1936

Vernissage le Mardi 10 Novembre à 4 heures

GALERIE BONAPARTE
(Près l'Ecole des Beaux-Arts)
12, rue Bonaparte
PARIS

Barrero.

= The Ten. — Cette exposition des Dix, à la Galerie Bonaparte, dix peintres américains, nous vaut une curieuse et intéressante préface au catalogue. Notre excellent frère Waldemar George, en effet, nous parle là de la putative Ecole Américaine, de la volonté d'indépendance des artistes américains, du disparate de leurs tendances, de l'impossibilité actuelle de prévoir les destinées de l'art américain. La présente exposition, qui a inspiré à M. Waldemar George cette belle préface, offre un très vif intérêt, où la libération joyeuse autant que sombre pathétique humains se lisent tour à tour sur les toiles des dix peintres américains. Il y faut faire une visite.

Pierre Paulus.

NEW YORK HERALD TRIBUNE, PARIS, SUNDAY, NOVEMBER 22, 1936

'The Ten' Art Exhibit Is Work of N.Y. Artists

Among interesting art exhibitions now on view in Paris is the show staged by "The Ten," a group of young New York artists, at the Galerie Bonaparte, 12 Rue Bonaparte. The exhibition is remarkable for its spirit of vitality and sincerity, qualities that are sufficiently rare today to attract attention.

The advanced element in this enterprising group is represented by Louis Schanker, Ilya Rothkowitz and Joseph Solman, whose works reveal solidity of composition and originality. Tschacbasov's work shows what constructivism can attain when applied by a healthy masculine temperament, and Jankel Kufeld's dramatic compositions would have found favor with Daumier.

The art of Ben Zion, despite its voluntary simplification, gives striking expression to the nostalgic and mystic side of the Jewish character. There is a pleasing sense of intimacy in Louis Harris's "Léçon de Peinture" and "Mère et Enfant," and Adolphe Gottlieb's pictures are sensitive and harmonious. Ilya Boleslavsky and Joseph Solman are likewise promising artists.

Louis Schanker

Cérémonie de Mariage
Trois hommes sur un banc
Scène de Café

THIRD BIENNIAL EXHIBITION OF CONTEMPORARY AMERICAN PAINTING

NOVEMBER 10 TO DECEMBER 10, 1936

WHITNEY MUSEUM OF AMERICAN ART
TEN WEST EIGHTH STREET, NEW YORK

FOREWORD

The THIRD BIENNIAL EXHIBITION of CONTEMPORARY AMERICAN PAINTING

constitutes the fifth in the series, inaugurated in 1932, of alternating exhibitions, one year of paintings in oil, the following year of sculpture, watercolors, drawings and prints.

These exhibitions are organized by a different method than that usually employed in assembling exhibitions of a similar character. No jury is appointed to choose the exhibits, the Museum accepting full responsibility for the artists invited. The choice of the work contributed is left to the judgment of the artist.

To avoid the disproportionate emphasis often placed upon a few works singled out for cash prizes and other honors, it is the Museum's policy to eliminate such awards and instead to acquire outstanding works for the Museum's Collection from an annual purchase fund of twenty thousand dollars.

One hundred and twenty-three artists have contributed a painting each to the present exhibition. Though limitations of space necessarily exclude many artists of equal importance to those invited, each exhibition includes a large proportion of new names. This year thirty-nine artists are represented who were not included in the previous biennial exhibition of painting.

In spite of its comparatively small size, we believe that this exhibition is representative of the most vital painting produced in America today.

ART COMMENT

by JEROME KLEIN

hand over.

3RD SHOW BY THE TEN WINDS UP BUSY SEASON

The Ten winds up an active season with its third group show, consisting of one canvas for each member at the Georgette Passedoit Gal-

Lee Gatch has reduced Pennsylvania barns to a fine fabric of floating color. A. Gottlieb paints fishermen with his usual free swing and with more than usual substance. While Schanker plays the chromatic overtones in his study of musicians, Ben-Zion holds to a resounding major chord in his still life.

Other works are a dullish subway scene by Kufeld, Solman's characteristic "Gas Station," a figure group by Harris that is richly painted but mussed in the working, an abstraction of Bolotowsky and a serene figure study by Rothko, leaning a bit toward the nebulous.

The figures silhouetted against a symbolic hand were painted on rocks in the Libyan desert roughly a hundred centuries ago (and are now shown in facsimile at the Museum of Modern Art).

WHAT DO YOU CALL MODERN?

while the angular musicians were done recently by Louis Schanker. They are in the exhibition by "The Ten" at the Georgette Passedoit Gallery.

ART FRONT. MURRAY H.

Louis Schanker

st ca pi T ro a at

BONESTELL GALLERY

106 E. 57 ST.

B E N — Z I O N
ILYA BOLOTOWSKY
DAVID BURLIUK
EARL KERKAM
KARL KNATHS (Guest)
JEAN LIBERTE (Guest)
RALPH ROSENborg
MARCUS ROTHKOWITZ
LOUIS SHANKER
JOSEPH SOLMAN

the ten oct.

23 nov. 4

NOVEMBER
5
•
2
6

THE TEN: WHITNEY DISSENTERS

MERCURY GALLERIES
4 EAST 8th STREET, NEW YORK CITY

A new academy is playing the old comedy of attempting to create something by naming it. Apparently the effort enjoys a certain popular success, since the public is beginning to recognize an "American art" that is determined by non-aesthetic standards—geographical, ethnical, moral or narrative—depending upon the various lexicographers who bestow the term. In this battle of words the symbol of the silo is in ascendancy in our Whitney museums of modern American art. The TEN remind us that the nomenclature is arbitrary and narrow.

For four years THE TEN have been exhibiting as an articulate entity; their work has been shown at the Montross Gallery, The New School for Social Research, Georgette Passedoit, the Municipal Gallery and at the Galerie Bonaparte in Paris. They have been called expressionist, radical, cubist and experimentalist. Actually, they are experimenters by the very nature of their approach, and, consequently, strongly individualistic. Their association has arisen from this community of purpose rather than from any superficial similarity in their work. As a group they are homogeneous in their consistent opposition to conservatism, in their capacity to see objects and events as though for the first time, free from the accretions of habit and divorced from the conventions of a thousand years of painting. They are heterogeneous in their diverse intellectual and emotional interpretations of the environment.

A public which has had "contemporary American art" dogmatically defined for it by museums as a representational art preoccupied with local color has a conception of an art only provincially American and contemporary only in the strictly chronological sense. This is aggravated by a curiously restricted chauvinism which condemns the occasional influence of the cubist and abstractionist innovators while accepting or ignoring the obvious imitations of Titian, Degas, Breughel and Chardin.

The title of this exhibition is designed to call attention to a significant section of art being produced in America. Its implications are intended to go beyond one museum and beyond one particular group of dissenters. It is a protest against the reputed equivalence of American painting and literal painting.

BEN-ZION

1. The Glory of War
(Part III of a Triptych)

ILYA BOLOTOWSKY

2. Composition (1938)
3. Composition (1938)

ADOLPH GOTTLIEB

4. Pete Machady's Place
5. Wrestlers

JOHN D. GRAHAM

6. Bull Fight No. 1
7. Bull Fight No. 2

LOUIS HARRIS

8. Dead End Street
9. Twilight

EARL KERKAM (Guest)

10. Still Life
11. Head

RALPH M. ROSENBORG

12. Night Scene
13. City Night

MARCUS ROTHKOWITZ

14. Movie Palace
15. Conversation

LOUIS SCHANKER

16. Acrobats
17. Street Scene From My Window

JOSEPH SOLMAN

18. Ice Cellar
19. Street Scene

Of the artists more directly inspired by the shapes of this world, George McNeil and Louis Schanker seemed to have most to offer. McNeil, far from becoming arbitrary, related his color to the general grey-green of an interior. Pigment was handled emotionally, with broad feeling for natural forms, although none was specifically used.

Rosalind Bengelsdorf was eclectic, able but unnecessarily complex. Good painting, but without positive viewpoint. The same can be said for many others.

Of the sculptors, Robert Foster, Gertrude Greene and Warren Wheelock showed good things with the palm going to Gertrude Greene for her superb relief.

Jacob Kainen

THE ART NEWS

Versatility of Talent Exhibited by "The Ten"

AN EXHIBITION by the group of painters who call themselves "The Ten" is now being held at the Gallery of Georgette Passedoit where one painting by each of the artists is on view. One looks in vain for special reasons to have brought this group together, but judging on the basis of a single painting from each man, the total effect is one of good, sound work, definitely experimental in tendency.

Discussion by Louis Harris is distinguished by a rich tonality, subdued browns, reds and blues being effectively contrasted. There is character and life in the figures, and a pleasing design in the composition which they make, seated around a table. In Subway Yankel Kufeld is mainly concerned with the pattern made by train and tunnel, and presents an interesting contrapuntal effect in subterranean construction work. Ben-Zion's vital, strong color and vigorous linear strength is seen in a still-life painting. Surf Casting by Adolph Gottlieb creates a mood through contrasts of light and darkness. Joseph Solman's Gas Station is less representational than most of his recent work, and makes effective use of black to define his pattern of primary colors. Musicians by Louis Schanker is a study almost abstract in form, but instead of the flat, two-dimensional objective in this type of composition, there is plasticity in the forms, and a gamut of quivering color in their description which make it an outstanding painting of this show.

J. L.

ART FRONT, C
Wain

American Abstract Artists

NEW YORK WORLD-TELEGRAM,

SATURDAY, MAY 1, 1937.

Skillful and Sincere.

"The Ten" are showing at the Gallery of Georgette Passedoit, the ten being a handful of the painters first sponsored by Robert Godsoe at his defunct Gallery Secession, plus a few additions like Lee Gatch and Ben-Zion. None of the pictures are master works, it may be said at the start, with the possible exception of the familiar Gatch "Pennsylvania Barn," shown recently at Neumann's. Most of them, however, reflect serious aspiration, great sincerity and more than average skill. Louis Schanker's semi-abstraction "Musicians," for example, is a commendable piece, along with Adolph Gottlieb's fine "Surf Casting." Ben-Zion's interestingly colored "Still-Life" and Rothkowitz's sensitive "Family."

SUNDAY, DECEMBER 22, 1923

NEW YORK SUN, SATURDAY, DECEMBER 21,

Attractions in the Galleries

These ten artists who happen to be nine (they say they hope to get another member some day) in the Montross Gallery are worth seeing. Their names are Ben-Zion, Ilya Bolotowsky, Adolph Gottlieb, Louis Harris, Kufeld, Marcus Rothkowitz, Louis Schanker, Joseph Solman and Tschacbasov. Hard names for New Yorkers to circumvent, but possibly citizens of Moscow and Odessa would find them easy.

These young artists are completely uninhibited and paint anything. They attack a canvas with as much fury and excitement as they would spend in attacking a government. Some of them have already said, "Down with subject matter!" and have become cubists. Some of them go into trances and paint dreams. Some of them mock politicians. One of them even goes deeply into social etiquette and discusses lynching. They dare any theme, and in a splashing, dashing youthful fashion get away with it.

As it happens, the one who did the lynching picture, Mr. Ben-Zion, is the farthest along of the lot. His lynching picture, I presume, is a lynching to end lynching. At any rate it is the first of the kind that I personally have ever been able to stand, and if I were collecting curiosa I would certainly buy it. The victim is not made too prominent in the composition, and even the misguided lynchers are not too much insisted on. Instead there is a swirl of black trees and some clutching hands in places where they do the most good, and a mood of something ominous about to happen, you don't know quite what. It's only the title of the picture that gives the whole thing away. If I were to buy it (I haven't decided positively yet) I should retitle the picture and call it "The Storm."

Mr. Gottlieb, who paints less furiously than Mr. Ben-Zion, is also interesting. He works mostly in soft grays and browns, and his "Rendezvous" would also hold its own in a collection of curiosa. His "Nude," however, an effort at distortion that does not have authority, shows how necessary it is to have a secure background of form, like Picasso or Franklin Watkins, before venturing upon these dream pictures. Other compositions that stand out are these: "Art Class," by Mr. Bolotowsky; "Abandoned Factory," by Mrs. Harris; "Three Clowns," by Mr. Shanker; "L," by Mr. Solman, and "Politician," by Mr. Tschacbasov.

A New Group—At the Montross Galleries, until Jan. 4, is an exhibition by "The Ten: An Independent Group." The nine artists represented, each by four paintings, are Ben-Zion, Ilya Bolotowsky, Adolph Gottlieb, Louis Harris, Kufeld, Marcus Rothkowitz, Louis Schanker, Joseph Solman and Tschacbasov, several of whom were members of Robert U. Geddes's "Gallery Seduction" last year.

Perhaps they can be loosely grouped as "expressionists." The pictures are mostly such as to give any one with the slightest academic sympathies apoplexy. While wishing them full measure of success in their efforts to be individual, I personally feel that there is much needless obscurity and reasonless distortion in most of the work, rather than any striking originality. Tschacbasov's "Three Graces," for instance, seems to me to have been inspired by primitive wood carving. Here and there are notes reminiscent of Klee, Rouault or the less geometrical abstractionists. Most of the pictures, moreover, seem to me to have no such paint quality, drawing, compositional appeal or message as to demand for them very serious attention.

Introducing 'The Ten'— NEW YORK,

BROOKLYN DAILY EAGLE, SUNDAY, DECEMBER 22,

By CHARLES Z. OFFIN

NINE ARTISTS in search of a tenth—they've already christened themselves "The Ten"—are introducing themselves as an independent group at the Montross Gallery. Maybe it is just one more case of a number of non-conforming individuals not believing in organizations and all of them feeling so strongly and harmoniously on the subject that they formed one of their own. There is no doubt about this group being composed of kindred spirits. Never have I seen such intense individualism fused into such a well-balanced, harmonious ensemble. The artists, to list them alphabetically as is tactfully done in the exhibition catalogue, are Ben Zion, Ilya Bolotowsky, Adolph Gottlieb, Louis Harris, Kufeld, Marcus Rothkowitz, Louis Schanker, Joseph Solman and Tschacbasov. Most of these names will only be familiar to those who have visited the out-of-the-way, courageous galleries that have devoted themselves to the encouragement of strongly individual painters with a quality not easy at first to absorb. In selecting the Montross Gallery for their place of exhibition "The Ten" not only makes its work more convenient to get to, but also assures it of the type of audience that is more apt to come forward with some material appreciation.

As for me, alas, the only kind of largesse that I can dispense is strictly not of the material kind, otherwise I would have walked home from the exhibit with Ben Zion's "Friday Evening" under my arm, and with an option on "Girl in Pink."

"Sweater" by Louis Harris and "Handout" by Tschacbasov. The 36 paintings in the show, accompanied by a small roomful of water colors not catalogued, will remain on view until Jan. 4.

Louis the Club of One.

To THE EDITOR OF THE SUN—Sir: Henry McBride notices a new art society, "The Ten." In 1899 there was "The Ten," with Hassam, Reid, &c., as members. Most of them I knew, but when I asked them to make me the eleventh member they snubbed me. Then I wrote to THE SUN stating that I started a club and called it "The One," with me as president and sole exhibitor. That placed me in a more important niche. And to this day when I've had an oil on show all the artists were acknowledging me as the foremost painter. Not a bad idea of mine. The new club is amusing: Why ten? Twelve would be more generous. Well, some artists are awfully clannish. Selah!

LOUIS M. EILSHEMIUS, M. A.
New York, December 23.

EXHIBITION "THE TEN" WHITNEY DISSENTERS

NOV. 5-26

MERCURY GALLERIES
4 EAST 8TH ST.

* * *

The Ten, a group which persists in being nine with a variable guest, is exhibiting at the Mercury Gallery, 4 East Eighth Street, till Nov. 13. The subtitle "Whitney Dissenters" has been added for the show; and a sophomoric pronouncement in the catalogue seeks to identify the Whitney Museum with the "silo school of American art." One of the ten is a current exhibitor at the Whitney and one or two others have not dissented from exhibiting there in the past, which speaks rather for the catholicity of the Whitney shows than for the purity of the Ten's views. Their paintings in this show, as before, strike me as revealing a lot of influence and derivations from European modernists such as Klee and Mondrian, and are no more purified than the views expressed in the catalogue foreword.

* * *

THE ART NEWS

November 12, 1938

"WHITNEY DISSENTERS" HOLD THEIR OWN EXHIBITION

A GROUP calling itself "The Ten," which has been exhibiting as an entity for the past four years, now is showing its work at the Mercury Galleries under the title "The Ten: Whitney Dissenters." Numerically this is the correct number, and some of the painting is well worth seeing, but one of the dissenters, Ilya Bolotowsky, should hasten to the current Whitney show and remove his canvas, an abstraction which has been described as more Miro than Miro himself, if he wishes to seem a veritable dissenter.

It is in their more positive vein that "The Ten" are most interesting, and they are wrong if they imagine that, as honest and significant painters, their work cannot be matched in the current Whitney event. But Louis Schanker's delightful Street Scene From My Window calls forth admiration for its delicacy of color and kaleidoscopic forms in plane geometry. Ben-Zion's The Glory of War, which is part of a triptych, is resounding in its color and form, and Adolph Gottlieb invokes a mood which is authentic in Pete Machady's Place. Earl Kerkam's Head is less stylized than some of his recent work, and yet bears clearly the mark of his individual view. Both Joseph Solman and Louis Harris create of familiar stuff an agreeable nostalgia, Ice Cellar by the former being the sort of painting which would make an American in Europe homesick for its peculiarly New Yorkese quality. Perhaps as an example of what the group stands for in the preface to the catalog, Marcus Rothkowitz represents best in Conversation. Certainly it is freshly seen and painted with spontaneity and emotional power.

J. L.